

Patsy McGarry

Patsy McGarry is Religious Affairs Correspondent of The Irish Times since March 1997. From Ballaghaderreen Co Roscommon and graduate of NUI Galway, he began in journalism at university and continued at then pirate station Dublin's Sunshine Radio in 1983.

Since when, he worked at Magill magazine, the Press group of newspapers and Independent Newspapers, before setting up the newsroom at the then first independent radio station Capitol Radio in 1989. In 1990, he returned to print journalism, and began working at The Irish Times in 1993.

He addressed the Irish Association once before. That was at the City Hotel Armagh in October 2003, on the theme 'Nothing but trouble: Religion and the Irish problem.'